
USDA CONSIDERING CHANGES IN FLUE-CURED TOBACCO PROGRAM - The U. S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) announced on February 25, that it is considering changes in marketing quota and price support regulations of the flue-cured tobacco program.

These changes are being considered after allegations of abuses in the program--particularly related to production and marketing of tobacco outside a farm's quota--were brought to USDA's attention in a series of public meetings. During the meetings, individual farmers, farm organization representatives and members of the tobacco trade stated they felt that many farmers produce substantially in excess of their quotas and illegally dispose of the excess. The belief was also stated that high flue-cured tobacco leasing costs could be attributed, in part, to speculation by some producers.

The changes being considered are (1) eligibility requirements for approving the lease of marketing quotas filed after June 14 of any year and, (2) establishing compliance with acreage allotments as a condition of price support eligibility.

Under the first change, a farmer could only lease out a quantity of quota equal to the difference between the expected production on the acres he actually plants and the production on those acres. Under current, regulations, a farmer can lease out a quantity equal to the difference between expected production on his total allotment and the actual production on the acres planted.

Leases filed after June 14 would also be disapproved if the quantity stipulated in the lease exceeds the difference between the receiving farms quota and the amount of tobacco it has on hand to market. Under current regulations, there is no limit on the amount of quota a producing farm may receive.

June 14 is used as a cut-off date because of limiting factors in current legislation that become effective on that date and because by that time, a producer should have a nearly-accurate estimate of his production and would, therefore, have no reason to acquire an amount of quota larger than the estimated production.

Under the second considered change, a farm on which the certified or measured acreage planted to flue-cured tobacco exceeds 107 percent of the farm acreage allotment would be ineligible for price support and would receive a marketing card marked "No Price Support" to so indicate. (Marketing cards are documents issued by the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service which stipulate what quantity of tobacco a producer may sell without penalty and indicate a producers eligibility for price support.) Under current regulations, price support is made available without regard to actual acreage planted.

If USDA goes ahead with formal proposals, the changes will be set forth in detail in Federal Register with the public invited to express its comments and recommendations. No decisions will be made with respect to the proposed changes until such a notice has been made and responses evaluated.

It's funny how much easier it is to say what's on your mind sitting around the kitchen table.

For a hundred years farmers have been among Fidelity's most important customers. And during that century, we have found out one thing for sure: farming is the most individual business in the world.

There aren't any quick and easy formulas because every farmer has his own individual problems. And whether your situation calls for a loan from us, a personal introduction to one of the many government agencies set up to assist farmers, or simply some sound financial advice, we're the kind of bank who will get down to business with you in the kitchen over a cup of coffee.

You're in a complicated business. Money management is as important as land management. Maybe more important. That's where we come in. First to talk with you...then to work with you. Farming is your business; financial management is ours. Let's get together.
